The small bus stop in my village was busy with people and overloaded buses. On the ground were even more things to load. Touts were shouting the names where their buses were going.

"City! City! Going west!" I heard a tout shouting.
That was the bus I needed to catch.

The city bus was almost full, but more people were still pushing to get on. Some packed their luggage under the bus. Others put theirs on the racks inside.

Bis ne'ebé atu fila nakonu lalais loos. Lakleur nia sei fila ba fali leste. Buat ne'ebé importante tebes ba ha'u agora, mak atu buka ha'u nia tiu nia uma.

The return bus was filling up quickly. Soon it would make its way back east. The most important thing for me now, was to start looking for my uncle's house.

Nine hours later, I woke up with loud banging and calling for passengers going back to my village. I grabbed my small bag and jumped out of the bus.

New passengers clutched their tickets as they looked for somewhere to sit in the crowded bus.
Women with young children made them comfortable for the long journey.

I squeezed in next to a window. The person sitting next to me was holding tightly to a green plastic bag. He wore old sandals, a worn out coat, and he looked nervous.

On the way, I memorised the name of the place where my uncle lived in the big city. I was still mumbling it when I fell asleep.

I looked outside the bus and realised that I was leaving my village, the place where I had grown up. I was going to the big city.

The loading was completed and all passengers were seated. Hawkers still pushed their way into the bus to sell their goods to the passengers. Everyone was shouting the names of what was available for sale. The words sounded funny to me.

Bainhira viajen lao dadaun, bis laran sente manas loos. Ha'u taka ha'u nia matan espera atu toba.

As the journey progressed, the inside of the bus got very hot. I closed my eyes hoping to sleep.

A few passengers bought drinks, others bought small snacks and began to chew. Those who did not have any money, like me, just watched.

As the bus left the bus stop, I stared out of the window. I wondered if I would ever go back to my village again.

These activities were interrupted by the hooting of the bus, a sign that we were ready to leave.
The tout yelled at the hawkers to get out.

Vendedor sira dudu malu atu sai husi bis. Balun

Hawkers pushed each other to make their way out of the bus. Some gave back change to the travellers. Others made last minute attempts to sell more items.
